ACT FOUNDER FEATURED IN NJ BIZ

NJ Biz Features Veronica Williams in Minority Report

Short Hills, NJ – August 9, 2005 – Small businesses can face formidable, often unforeseen, challenges when seeking government set-aside contracts. Marty Daks, NJBIZ Staff Writer, uncovers these challenges in “The Trouble with Set-Asides” as he covers small business owners and public officials involved with government contracting (NJ Biz, August 1, 2005).

One of the challenges presented by Daks is the sheer volume of paperwork and lengthy applications process required for certification. The paperwork is just the start. ACT Inc. has learned that traditional challenges facing small businesses can be magnified after winning a set-aside contract. “Lack of access to capital, the lengthy procurement process, and expensive contractual requirements can make government set-aside contracts unprofitable for small companies,” notes Veronica Williams, Founder of ACT, Inc. Being the primary contractor usually more profitable in any contract, government or private.

Daks points out how the U.S. Small Business Administration, NJ Transit, NJ DOT and the Port Authority of NY & NJ have taken steps to streamline the small business certification process.

ACT Inc. continues to seek subcontractor positions and is very selective about with whom we partner. We have established relationships with major government contractors but spend most of our resources pursuing prime contractor positions. Nevertheless, government contracts offer long-term growth and steady cash flow, so ACT Inc. will continue to pursue them.
